Polls had fair share of puja, black magic & Feng Shui.

Such amusing tamashas we all had to go through every day during the general elections! Have you noticed the black threads and multi-coloured rings on our politicians? You may find a politician here with 20 rings on 10 fingers. Whew! Our politicians and their superstitions regarding mahurat timings, religious ceremonies and the exact timing to file nominations was amusing. Pujas were held in every temple in the capital that I can think of. One pandit had two candidates to pray for, and both of them were standing against each other in the same Delhi constituency. So, can you imagine the chaos if his puja had worked? Feng Shui is the new in-thing. A lady called Neeta Sinha is the busiest person I know today.

Travelling in the country and abroad too, she works on homes, corporate houses and nearly all our filmstars are her clients. She puts a moneyplant or chimes here, takes a mirror off there or puts a red cushion somewhere. Easy and workable solutions, no breaking of walls or changing of doors, like in Vaastu.

Neeta is an astro-architect and has extraordinary powers. She has clients like Govinda, Amitabh Bachchan, Karan Johar and Manisha Koirala and she can with her powers also deal with problems relating to finance, career, health and extra-marital affairs. This lady says that after Bombay was changed to Mumbai, it has not only lost its shine but the new spelling has affected Bal Thackeray's influence in the city too. Well, all this is better than getting into tantra and black magic. By the way, those were also very popular in this election season.
